Chagall's little night music: one of his most famous paintings, Le Violoniste Bleu (1947), is a perfect example of his art: childhood memories from his Russian home village of Vitebsk mingle with romantic motifs from Paris, the city of love.

In Chagall's work, the laws of gravity are suspended just as much as central perspective or causality: the famous painter lets the giant figure of the violinist float on a stool in the blue sky above the roofs of his native village Vitebsk. The stool's seat is folded into the picture plane. In contrast, the picture seems to be infinite in depth. A bright bouquet of flowers appears under the moon, and three small birds settle on the flying musician. The moonlight bathes the scene in a silver-blue light while the violinist plays a sweet night song to the world.
