The offered triptych "Monochrome and Fire" by Yves Klein was released on the occasion of the eponymous exhibition at the Haus Lange Museum in Krefeld in 1961. "Monochrome and Fire" was the only retrospective that took place during the artist's lifetime and the most comprehensive one that has been realised for him to this day. It featured architectural drawings, an "immaterial space," as well as innovative blue, pink, and golden monochromatic works.

Klein worked with his characteristic blue pigment throughout his entire artistic career, and only in his later work did his colour palette broaden. The gold was a product of his artist's book and the performance "Zone de Sensibilité Picturale Immatérielle" (1959-62).
